SPECIAL CHRISTMAS ADDITION

FROM THE CURSILLO SECRETARIAT

A WORD FROM THE SECRETARIAT PRESIDENT

Father, thank you for watching over your servants in the San Diego Episcopal Cursillo Ministry and empowering us to continue to expand Your Kingdom here on Earth, through the love and power of Your Son, Our Savior, Jesus Christ, all to your glory. Amen.

My term to serve on the Secretariat and as its president is coming to an end. Through the sustaining power of the Holy Spirit, I believe the Cursillo Ministry in this diocese has moved forward: we have met our goals for 2016 set forth in the Pastoral Plan entered into with Bishop Mathes.

“The purpose of Cursillo is to bring Christ into our environments and thereby change the world for Christ using the proven strategies and methods of Cursillo.” [2016 Pastoral Plan] The witness talks given at the Ultreyas held this year give ample evidence that we have been true to that purpose. Including the modified Ultreya given at our Christmas Party on December 3, 2016, we will have held at least 8 Ultreyas as prescribed in the Pastoral Plan. In addition, the Cursillo Communities of St. Phillip’s Lemon Grove, and St. Paul’s Yuma have held their own Ultreyas. These are good signs that our Cursillo ministry is growing. □

We held two successful Cursillo Weekends in 2016 which have sent forth about 45 new Cursillistas into the world as mature Christian Leaders. Our Weekends continue to evince the unifying love of Jesus across cultural and language divides. The Cursillo Teams continue to model as Christian Communities in Action and provide the environment for the Holy Spirit to do His transformative work during the Weekends. The new Cursillistas have been well-served.

I am excited about the future for the Cursillo Ministry in the Diocese as the potential for participation of new candidates by lay people as well as clergy is growing. We have suffered some growing pains in the development of lay Christian Leaders within the Ministry. This is a good sign. The challenges are being addressed. I am excited about the development of new Cursillistas who are and soon will be taking leadership roles within the Cursillo Ministry and beyond.

We have made a concerted effort to inform about and encourage participation in the Day of Deeper Understanding, Group Reunions and Ultreyas. There is more work to do, especially in encouraging participation in Group Reunions. After all, Grouping is paramount in the continued spiritual growth of cursillistas.

I am confident that the Cursillo Ministry will be well served by the new lay members to the Secretariat, Rachel Ambasing, Kit Chevalier, and Craig Noble, as well as the continuing members—you know who you are. I am also joyful that Fr. Paul Gambling will be serving on the Secretariat. He will be joining a very able and faithful Clergy Team. I also have the utmost confidence in the incoming President, Jill McGrew.

I will miss the meetings because of the people I got to work with. It was serious work, but there was room for fun and laughter. My term on the Secretariat, especially the year as President, was spiritually uplifting. Thank you, brothers and sisters, and, Thanks be to God!

God bless you all!

Ruben

Our Happiness Consists in having the Vision of the Divine Essence

The title of this article is the truth. It is how we will find happiness. Yet, we search in all the wrong places trying desperately to find happiness. We try to find happiness in wealth, in honors, in fame, or glory. We try to find happiness in acquiring more power, in bodily health, in pleasure, and all kinds of created goods. Every one of the above listed things is good in some way, but it is incomplete and inadequate goodness. These things always leave us longing for more. We realize that they do not satisfy or fulfill our desires. We have an appetite for happiness and we are left hungry for more happiness. We are wrong in trying to find happiness in these ways.

St. Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274) said “It is impossible for any created good to constitute man’s happiness. For happiness is the perfect good, which lulls the appetite altogether; else it would not be the last end, if something yet remained to be desired. Now the object of the will, i.e. of man's appetite, is the universal good; just as the object of the intellect is the universal true. Hence it is evident that naught can lull man's will, save the universal good. This is to be found, not in any creature, but in God alone; because every creature has goodness by participation. Wherefore God alone can satisfy the will of man, according to the words of Ps. 10:5: "Who satisfieth thy desire with good things." Therefore God alone constitutes man's happiness. (Summa Theologiae I-II, Q.2). True happiness is to encounter the ultimate universal and uncreated good which is God. To see God as he really is, in his divine essence, is true happiness. St. Thomas says that true happiness is found in seeing God "as He is." He quotes the following verse of scripture:

1 John 3:2 Beloved, we are God's children now; what we will be has not yet been revealed. What we do know is this: when he is revealed, we will be like him, for we will see him as he is.

The words "he is" probably refer to Jesus Christ, according to most commentators. But to see Jesus in his second coming is to see God in all of His glory and therefore to see his divine essence. To see God in His divine essence is to enter into the state of our completed salvation and perfect happiness. In this state, we will have perfect obedience, perfect purity, and perfect love. There will be no room for any sin that can mar our union with Jesus and deprive us of any amount of happiness.

You might ask, "But wait a minute! This ultimate state of happiness sounds great, but I am still living down here on earth in this sinful world. What does this have to do with me today?" I can't see the divine essence of God as we will know Him at the end of time. So it sounds like happiness is beyond my reach. In John 1:18, it says "No one has ever seen God. It is God the only Son, who is close to the Father's heart who has made him known." We cannot now see God directly, but we see something of the divine essence when we see God through the person and work of Jesus Christ. In Jesus, we see as much of the divine essence as we can possibly see in our current life. When we participate and experience the love of Jesus we are coming as close as we can to the divine essence in this life. And we must be clear what this love is and what it is showing us. Karl Barth (1886-1968) says "According to Holy Scripture the love of God has nothing to do with mere sentiment, opinion or feeling. On the contrary, it consists in definite being, relationship and action. God is love in Himself. Being loved by Him we can, as it were, look into His "heart". The fact that He loves us means that we can know Him as He is."(Church Dogmatics Volume I, Part 2, page 377).

When we are supernaturally, miraculously participating in the love of Jesus Christ, we are being filled with the essence of God and therefore filled with a happiness that is not of this world. Again, as Karl Barth says about God, "We can look into His "heart." and "The fact that He loves us means that we can know Him as He is."

Pray and think of ways that you can participate in the love of Jesus Christ and you will be moving toward perfect happiness. What the psalmist says will become true for you: "Happy are the people whose God is the Lord." Psalm 144, verse 16

Your friend in Christ,
Father George

Fighting the oxymoron perception begins with individuals, the Rev. Stephanie Spellers, the presiding bishop's canon for evangelism and reconciliation, said during the Nov. 19 plenary, asking "why do we need a conference to convince ourselves or to proclaim that evangelism matters?"

"I think you know why," she answered. "I think we know that, deep down, we've been ambivalent" about even the word "evangelism," much less being evangelists.

When she asked people to shout out why that is so, some of the answers were "fear of rejection," "fear of looking tacky," "hurtful things that have been done in the name of evangelism," "leave it to the clergy," "people have to be gifted to do evangelism" and "I'm not sure; what is the Good News?"

Curry: 'Evangelism is about going home and helping each other find the way.'

Evangelism Matters, which quickly sold out its 400 spaces and then made room for 14 more, was co-sponsored by Forward Movement and the Presiding Bishop's Office, and was hosted by the Diocese of Dallas and Church of the Transfiguration.

Presiding Bishop Michael Curry, during his keynote address and again during his sermon, set an ambitious agenda, gave a rousing call to action and explicated what Episcopal evangelism is and is not.

"Jesus did not go to the cross for a bigger church," Curry said during his address, adding that, likewise, evangelism doesn't have anything to do with making a bigger church; it has to do with a better world. It also has nothing to do with cultural or religious imperialism. "This is not about conquering the world for Christ," he said during his sermon. "It's about saturating the world with love."

Maybe, Curry suggested, the Episcopal Church is supposed to tell the world that Christianity's foundation is the love shown in Jesus.

And, he said, God is at work in this growing awareness. "I think we're in one of those cultural moments in which we very well may be participating in God's re-evangelization of the western world and a re-evangelization via a Christianity that resembles Jesus."

Curry said "evangelism is about going home and helping each other find the way" and it is about helping people find God and build a relationship with God, who made them for love and longs for them.

"Evangelism matters because God didn't make us for a nightmare," he said.

Curry described his dreams for the church. In what he called a fantasized possibility and not a proposed program or an official statement, he asked the conference to imagine what it would be like if the Episcopal Church adopted the model of Doctors Without Borders by marshaling its resources and going anywhere there is a need.

“What if the churchwide budget — General Convention — said to heck with some of this structure, let’s just use this money for evangelism wherever there is a need?” he asked, adding the question of what if dioceses purposefully contributed to evangelism going on anywhere in the church.

Curry asked what would happen if every time a church had to close somewhere and the property sold “some percentage of that money were taken and put in a ‘new generation fund’ to start new churches anywhere in the Church “so that the death of one leads to the resurrection of another?” The audience responded with loud and sustained applause.

The presiding bishop suggested some other possibilities for anchoring an evangelism ethic in the Episcopal Church. One suggestion was to require people preparing for ordination to get intense training in how to be evangelists just as they are now required to take a unit of clinical pastoral education to learn how to be spiritual caregivers. Another was finding ways to make social media in an authentic and positive way that could turn that media into “the new evangelism superhighway” similar to the way the efficiency of the Roman Empire, especially its highways and its postal system, enabled the swift spread of budding Christianity.

*'I got in touch with a way of speaking about it that I hadn't done before,' said

For two of the organizers, the conference was evidence of God at work. “We dreamed of something happening in the church and God did something more than we could have dreamed of,” the Rev. Frank Logue, Diocese of Georgia canon to the ordinary and Executive Council member, said of the size and mood of the conference.

But, he added, the conference has to be a beginning, not an accomplishment. It could be tempting to accept Curry’s self-declared role as “chief evangelism officer” and assume that is all that is needed.

“If we want to rely on our presiding bishop alone, as talented as he is, we will have made him into an idol and it would be better to ask him to step down,” he said. Instead, as Anglican Communion Secretary General Josiah Idowu-Fearon suggested during short remarks to the conference, if Episcopalians become chief evangelism officers in their diocese, their congregations and in their families, “then we will have really joined the movement.”

The Rev. Susan Snook, another Executive Council member and founding rector of Church of the Nativity in Scottsdale, Arizona, said when she sponsored Resolution D005 at General Convention in 2015 to set up a church-planting network and when Logue convinced that same meeting of convention to add \$2.8 million to the 2016-2018 budget for evangelism work, “we thought we were pushing at a closed door.”

“Or maybe we’d crack it open a little bit and, oh my gosh, we have found that the spirit has blown that door wide open. We are ready for something new in the church.”

She told ENS she would like to see Episcopalians connect with the people from their diocese who attended the conference and who can show them how to spread the good news of Christ through their communities.

Snook, a veteran evangelist and church planter, said she found renewal and refinement of her ministry at the conference. She went to the “Elevator Evangelism” workshop, run by the Rev. Casey Shobe, Transfiguration’s rector, and learned how to hone the story of why she follows Jesus down to one minute. “I got in touch with a way of speaking about it that I hadn’t done before,” she said.

Conference details

Participants had their choice of 25 workshops offered during three time slots. Among the workshop titles were “Talking God Today,” “Compassionate Evangelism: A Non-Judgmental Approach to Sharing Your Faith,” “Social Media, Evangelism and Connecting with Emerging Cultures,” and “How To Make a Rocking Welcome Video on a Dime.” Many of the workshops offered handouts to participants and most of those can be found here.

Parts of the conference were streamed live and at one point more than 1,000 computers had connected to the broadcast. Those streamed events are now available for on-demand viewing here. (In each viewer labeled “Church” and “Performance Hall” click on the icon in the upper right corner to find individual sessions.)

Logue summarized the conference during its closing session. That summary is here.

Prior to the Evangelism Matters conference, leaders of new church plants or mission initiatives met Nov. 16-17 in the inaugural Genesis Gathering of the Episcopal Church at the Church of the Ascension, also in Dallas. The conference’s goal was to help establish a community of practice among such leaders in which they could encourage each other and learn from each other. The Episcopal Church’s Genesis Group (formally known as the Advisory Group on Church Planting) sponsored the event.

A third gathering, an invitation-only meeting called “the summit,” gathered some participants of each of the other meetings before and after Evangelism Matters to discuss the current and hoped-for future state of evangelism in the Episcopal Church, and what resources are needed.
